FOREIGN NEWS.

Paris, June 25.—Simon W. Straus of Chicago, the president of the American Society for Thrift, has just finished several months of inquiry on the continent into the origins of economy among European peoples.

"I should say that a French family can live off of what an American family wastes," said Mr. Straus. "The principal reason, of course, is in a habit of mind, in a way of looking upon the relative values of efficient living as compared with inefficient and wasteful living. One may be as extravagant with a dollar as with a million.

"Now, the self-denial of the French in food and in other necessities of living often is carried into what I should consider excess, but there is nevertheless thoughtful, intelligent thrift in the French household which contributes to the happiness and well being of every member. It is that sort of thrift which I should like to see cultivated in American families—a careful adjustment, according to a thoughtful plan of the domestic budget, so much for rent, clothing, education, amusements of every member of the family, the provision for emergencies and old age.

"When a scheme of expenditure is adopted in the French home—and every French home, it is said, is a parliament—and carried out, every item of expenditure can be made with a certain contentment or even joy because it is known to be a harmonious relation with the whole. This makes French amusements so thoroughly enjoyed because there is no feeling of extravagance on the part of those amusing themselves. They take their amusements, and what might be to the observer indulgence, happily and without inward sense of discomfort and
